Trellech Hill/Lloysey Woods

Showing scant respect for the weather forecast a small group of ramblers from the Lower Wye Group ventured out for a short walk on Wednesday 29 January around Trellech. From the start point in the Peckett Stone car park they made their way over forest tracks to Maryland. Taking to the fields they crossed over Trellech Hill over a woodland path. This was not only surprisingly dry but crossed a wide area of moss of a rich and vibrant green, which lit up the drab winter's day.

A short descent over saturated fields brought them into the village on a track, emerging at the village green to pass around the parish church and across the fields to Lloysey Woods. The promise of more mud made the choice of the forest road a wise one and only a short climb up a muddy track was left to bring them back to the start point. Walk over, the ramblers were happy to repair to the Lion Inn and a log fire, for a well earned drink and home-baked baguette.
