

Sunday 7 May 2017: Blakeney, a bluebell walk

Twenty-four LWR members set out to view the bluebells on Blakeney Hill. Although initially greeted by grey skies and a cool breeze, within a short space of time the skies cleared and the woods were bathed in bright sunshine, lighting up the swathes of intense blue flowers under the vivid spring green of the tree canopy, and the air was filled with the heady scent of the bluebells. The five-mile stroll around the woodland paths allowed the group to enjoy one of the outstanding experiences of springtime in Britain.
